

Reed-Turner Woodland Botanical Artists' Circle

Who exactly are we?

The ASBA Reed-Turner Group is an 'Artists' Circle' of loosely connected, dedicated and enthusiastic avocational botanical artists many of whom have been or are associated with the botanical art classes of the Chicago Botanic Garden. Most members of the Circle are also members of the American Society of Botanical Artists. The ASBA actively promotes botanical art and organizes exhibitions and conferences regionally, nationally and internationally. It is considered to be one of the premier organizations promoting botanical art in the world.

The ASBA Reed-Turner Botanical Artists' Circle adheres to the parameters and goals of the American Society of Botanical Artists: www.asba-art.org. Consistent with the aims of the ASBA, the Circle works to further the interests of botanical art, conservation science, botany and horticulture at the local level. We also strive to highlight the beauty and importance plants play in our lives by promoting and exhibiting members' work in collaboration with local and regional institutions.

The ASBA Reed-Turner Botanical Artists' Circle has been in existence since 2005 and meets at the Reed-Turner Woodland Nature Preserve in Long Grove at 9:30 am on the last Saturday morning of each month. Members of the public who wish to engage in the practice of botanical art are most welcome to join the Circle.

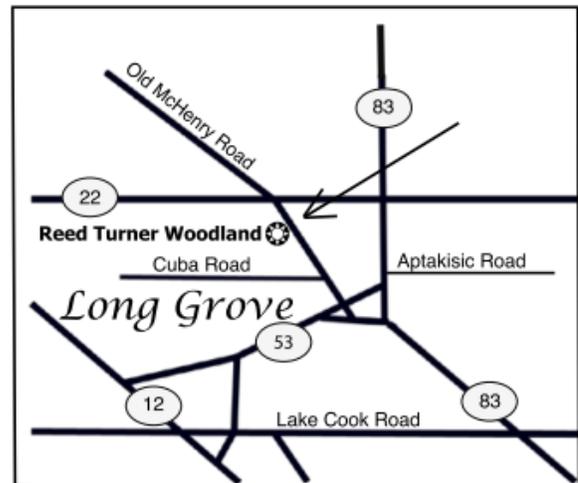

Directions: From jct. Hwy. 53 and Old McHenry Road in Long Grove, take Old McHenry Road Northwest 1.6 miles. The nature preserve is on the Southwest side of Old McHenry Road.

The annual membership fee is $25.
